

Jan Čermák, MD.

After graduating from medical school in Prague, he returned to his native region, where he worked in a small local hospital. In 2005, he returned to Prague to work in a research-oriented workplace, the Psychiatric Centre Prague. At that time, he was mainly involved in the treatment and research of psychoses. Since 2010, he has been running his own outpatient centre, where he also started to care for adult ADHD patients. Today, the topic of ADHD is one of his regular and daily clinical experiences. In the last few years, he has tried to popularize the issue of ADHD through lectures and podcast interviews.
